The laboratory growth diamond described in this Report (Report) has been graded, tested, analyzed, examined and/or inscribed by International Gemological Institute (I.G.I.). A laboratory grown diamond is one that has essentially the same chemical, physical and optical properties as a mined diamond, with the exception of being grown by man-made methods. A diamond is a crystalline form of carbon, which can be grown in a variety of ways, including but not limited to, high pressure, high temperature, chemical vapor deposition, and other methods. The I.G.I. Report includes a description of the diamond's characteristics, including but not limited to, color, clarity, cut, and weight. The I.G.I. Report also includes a description of the diamond's growth process, including but not limited to, the type of growth process used, the growth conditions, and the growth duration. The I.G.I. Report also includes a description of the diamond's physical and optical properties, including but not limited to, refractive index, birefringence, and dispersion. The I.G.I. Report also includes a description of the diamond's chemical properties, including but not limited to, hardness and stability. The I.G.I. Report also includes a description of the diamond's optical properties, including but not limited to, fluorescence and phosphorescence. The I.G.I. Report also includes a description of the diamond's physical and optical properties, including but not limited to, refractive index, birefringence, and dispersion. The I.G.I. Report also includes a description of the diamond's chemical properties, including but not limited to, hardness and stability. The I.G.I. Report also includes a description of the diamond's optical properties, including but not limited to, fluorescence and phosphorescence.
